THE two boys flew on and on, toward the village, speechless with horror. They glanced backward over THE two boys flew on and on, toward the village, speechless with horror. They glanced backward over their shoulders from time to time, apprehensively, as if they feared they might be followed. Every stumptheir shoulders from time to time, apprehensively, as if they feared they might be followed. Every stumptheir shoulders from time to time, apprehensively, as if they feared they might be followed. Every stumptheir shoulders from time to time, apprehensively, as if they feared they might be followed. that started up in their path seemed a man and an enemy, and made them catch their breath; and as they that started up in their path seemed a man and an enemy, and made them catch their breath; and as they sped by some outlying cottages that lay near the village, the barking of the aroused watch-dogs seemed to sped by some outlying cottages that lay near the village, the barking of the aroused watch-dogs seemed to give wings to their feet. give wings to their feet. "If we can only get to the old tannery before we break down!" whispered Tom, in short catches between I'If we can only get to the old tannery before we break down!" whispered Tom, in short catches between I'If we can only get to the old tannery before we break down!" whispered Tom, in short catches between I'If we can only get to the old tannery before we break down!" whispered Tom, in short catches between I'If we can only get to the old tannery before we break down!" whispered Tom, in short catches between I'If we can only get to the old tannery before we break down!" whispered Tom, in short catches between I'If we can only get to the old tannery before we break down!" whispered Tom, in short catches between I'If we can only get to the old tannery before we break down!" whispered Tom, in short catches between I'If we can only get to the old tannery before we break down!" whispered Tom, in short catches between I'If we can only get to the old tannery before we break down!" whispered Tom, in short catches between I'If we can only get to the old tannery before we break down!" whispered Tom, in short catches between I'If we can only get to the old tannery before we break down!" which is the old tanner to the old tanner breaths. "I can't stand it much longer." breaths. "I can't stand it much longer." Huckleberry's hard pantings were his only reply, and the boys fixed their eyes on the goal of their hopesHuckleberry's hard pantings were his only reply, and the boys fixed their eyes on the goal of their hopes and bent to their work to win it. They gained steadily on it, and at last, breast to breast, they burst throughand bent to their work to win it. They gained steadily on it, and at last, breast to breast, they burst through the open door and fell grateful and exhausted in the sheltering shadows beyond. By and by their pulses the open door and fell grateful and exhausted in the sheltering shadows beyond. By and by their pulses slowed down, and Tom whispered: slowed down, and Tom whispered:

of their

ast, they

"Huckleberry, what do you reckon'll come of this?"

THE two boys flew on and on, toward the village, speechless with horror. They glanced backward over their shoulders from time to time, apprehensively, as if they feared they might be followed. Every stump that started up in their path seemed a man and an enemy, and made them catch their breath; and as they sped by some outlying cottages that lay near the village, the barking of the aroused watch-dogs seemed to give wings to their feet.

"If we can only get to the old tannery before we break down!" whispered Tom, in short catches between breaths. "I com't stand it much langue "

Huckleberry's hard p of their hopes and bent to the change of the color of st, they burst through the ope nd. By and by their pulses sle "Huckleberry, what d

THE two boys flew on ard over their shoulders from ti d. Every stump that started up it eath; and tch-dogs as they sped by some c seemed to give wings to "If we can only get to catches between breaths. "I can hopes and bent to thei burst through the open wor and for graceful and confidence in the sheetering shadows or joined. By and by their pulses slowed down, and Tom whispered:

"Huckleberry, what do you reckon'll come of this?"

Huckleberry's hard par

THE two boys flew on and on, toward the village, speechless with horror. They glanced backward over their shoulders from time to time, apprehensively, as if they feared they might be followed. Every stump that started up in their path seemed a man and an enemy, and made them catch their breath; and as they sped by some outlying cottages that lay near the village, the barking of the aroused watch-dogs seemed to give wings to their feet.

"If we can only get to the old tannery before we break down!" whispered Tom, in short catches between breaths. "I can't stand it much longer." Huckleberry's hard pantings were his only reply, and the boys fixed their eyes on the goal of their hopes and bent to their work to win it. They gained steadily on it, and at last, breast to breast, they burst through the open door and fell grateful and exhausted in the sheltering shadows beyond. By and by their pulses slowed down, and Tom whispered:

"Huckleberry, what do you reckon'll come of this?"

"Huckleberry, what do you reckon'll come of this?"

THE two boys flew on and on, toward the village, speechless with horror. They glanced backward over their shoulders from time to time, apprehensively, as if they feared they might be followed. Every stump that started up in their path seemed a man and an enemy, and made them catch their breath; and as they sped by some outlying cottages that lay near the village, the barking of the aroused watch-dogs seemed to give wings to their feet.

burst through the open door and fell grateful and exhausted in the sheltering shadows beyond. By

"If we can only get to the old tannery before we break down!" whispered Tom, in short catches between breaths. "I can't stand it much longer." Huckleberry's hard pantings were his only reply, and the boys fixed their eyes on the goal of their hopes and bent to their work to win it. They gained steadily on it, and at last, breast to breast, they

and by their pulses slowed down, and Tom whispered: "Huckleberry, what do you reckon'll come of this?"

seemed to give wings to their feet. "If we can only get to the old tannery before we break down!" whispered Tom, in short catches between breaths. "I can't stand it much longer."

THE two boys flew on and on, toward the village, speechless with horror. They glanced backward over their shoulders from time to time, apprehensively, as if they feared they might be followed. Every stump that started up in their path seemed a man and an enemy, and made them catch their breath; and as they sped by some outlying cottages that lay near the village, the barking of the aroused watch-dogs

Huckleberry's hard pantings were his only reply, and the boys fixed their eyes on the goal of their hopes and bent to their work to win it. They gained steadily on it, and at last, breast to breast, they burst through the open door and fell grateful and exhausted in the sheltering shadows beyond. By and by their pulses slowed down, and Tom whispered:

"Huckleberry, what do you reckon'll come of this?"

backward over their shoulders from time to time, apprehensively, as if they feared they might be followed. Every stump that started up in their path seemed a man and an enemy, and made them catch their breath; and as they sped by some outlying cottages that lay near the village, the barking of the aroused watch-dogs seemed to give wings to their feet.

THE two boys flew on and on, toward the village, speechless with horror. They glanced

"If we can only get to the old tannery before we break down!" whispered Tom, in short catches between breaths. "I can't stand it much longer."

Huckleberry's hard pantings were his only reply, and the boys fixed their eyes on the goal of their hopes and bent to their work to win it. They gained steadily on it, and at last, breast to breast, they burst through the open door and fell grateful and exhausted in the sheltering shadows beyond. By and by their pulses slowed down, and Tom whispered:

"Huckleberry, what do you reckon'll come of this?"